About the Center for Immune Research

The Center for Immune Research was founded by Shaklee Corporation to promote a better understanding of the field of human immune health.

Following the principles of the Dietary Supplement Health and Education Act (DSHEA), the Center is devoted to underwriting and publishing independent research in the scientific literature about advances in the field. The Center also commissions opinion research on the attitudes and beliefs of the public regarding immune health and uses these findings to sponsor educational initiatives. As such, a major goal of the Center is to provide science-based information in layman's language that will help the public learn about the factors affecting immune health and the actions that are within their control to maintain a strong immune defense against invading viruses.
